11. Sexual objectification

Sexual objectification is the act of treating a person solely as an object of sexual desire. Objectification more broadly means treating a person as a commodity or an object without regard to their personality or dignity. Objectification is most commonly examined at the level of a society, but can also refer to the behavior of individuals and is a type of dehumanization.

14. Why So Much Sexual Violence Against Women In Globalized

The rampant sexual violence against women is a reminder that the problem is deeply rooted in Indian society. In such a situation we may not be able to avoid considering the responsibility of women. Their body-revealing clothing and conditional consent to sexual relation are significant in provoking men into treating them as sex objects.
15. Dehumanization A Mechanism For Narcissists And Sociopaths

Viewing individuals as objects allows them to treat them in the same way that they would a phone, car, table, or bed, for example. Objectification is the primary vehicle through which they are able to justify and commit their callous and often abusive acts towards others.

16. Feminist Perspectives on Objectification Stanford

Objectification, for Nussbaum is the seeing and/or treating a person as an object; it involves treating one thing as another: one is treating as an object what in fact is not an object, but a human being (Nussbaum 1995, 256-7). Nussbaum, then, disagrees with Green's view that people are partly objects.

17. Sex Objects and Sexy Subjects A Feminist Reclamation of Sexual objectification, in a male-dominated and heteronormative society, functions to reduce women to objects to be used at the discretion of men.

18. 4 Ways Men Are Taught to Objectify Women From Birth

And with women being taught to be silent about their wants and needs, it makes for a damaging combination where men begin viewing women as "numbers," as ideas, and as objects, and women are discouraged to speak out against it.

22. Feminist Perspectives on Sex Markets Stanford

sex work is not merely about treating a woman as an object nor merely about dehumanizing her. Sex work is a complex dialectic between subject and object in which a woman's dehumanization is successful precisely because she is perceived as a person whose will, seductiveness, and power is properly subordinate to men. (LeMoncheck 1997: 134)

23. Dehumanized The Gender Ads Project

Background: Women are not only portrayed in decorative senses in advertising (Wiles 1991), but too often they are portrayed as less-than-human objectsâ€”humiliated and subjects of violence. These ads establish the problematic dimensions of gender and sexuality in western society. Quite simply, for those who deny the problem, have a look at ...
